

Pearl River teenager wins national contest for inventing new game

10:30 PM, Jun. 22, 2011

f Recommend Be the first of your friends to recommend this.

f Recommend 0 Tweet 1 Pin It AA+

Written by CHARLENE V. MARTONI

PEARL RIVER — Nicholas "Nic" Fornario, 19, began his inventing career by taking apart his parents' garage door opener. He was introduced to the world of invention when his kindergarten teacher hosted a show-and-tell.

FILED UNDER

News
Rockland County, New York

Over the past 15 years, the young entrepreneur has entered more than 20 competitions, winning more than $30,000 in prize money, he said.

Fornario recently won first place in the Sports Authority's national "Move It Challenge" for his invention of a game he named "Tic Tac Tag." The contest generated 4,000 submissions nationwide. Its goal was to encourage young people to ...

CONTINUE READING IN OUR PAID ARCHIVE

Most Popular Most Commented More Headlines

- 1 'Sound of Music': Critic, readers give their reviews (videos)
- 2 Leake & Watts teacher, 34, accused of raping student, 16
- 3 Stony Point contractor killed in van rollover
- 4 Baby Angel case: Cops seek woman seen in video who 'acted strange' at funeral
- 5 Waitress in tip tale, a former Stony Point resident, 'lies about everything,' ex-coworkers, friends say

Most Viewed

TOP VIDEO PICKS

YOU MIGHT BE INTERESTED IN

- UnitedHealthcare drops physicians from Medicare...
- Bones found in Harriman State Park 'not human'; search...
- Bronx derailment: Hudson Line service mostly restored...
- Kutscher's, iconic Catskills resort, sold to lifestyle...